

a web infrastructure to encourage collaboration, content sharing and free culture

Dec-2008

about kune

- small intro using the new web description

Goals

- Lista de objetivos para todos los públicos
- To offer web services permitting any group of person to work together and to share their works
- Encourage of free (as in freedom) culture
- free software infraestructure

Features

- here a short list of current features in kune

Starting

- all start with a person initiative and creating a group, that is, a project, an organization or a open community (joder que mal explicado)
- after that, he/she selects the image for the group, the logo, the tools will use (like docs manager, blogs, media gallery, chat rooms, wiki, an soon)

user personal space

- optionally, an user can have a personal space also with similar tools and functionality content management

- creation of different kind of contents like docs, blogs, wikis, media galleries
- easy edition and publication
- preview of PDFs and other kind of uploaded files

Intercommunication

- any user have a jabber chat account that can interact with other similar chat accounts (like gmail chat)
- groups can create chat rooms and invite people to chatroom meetings (also external users)
- people can comment online any content

Powerful user interface

- you can, for instance, chat in several conversations while editing and even while going back/forward in your browser history
- drag & drop to invite someone in your buddie list to a conversation
- ... and without popups
- all in the same single web page (powered by GWT)

social network

- groups easy can manage their members and their new members acceptance policy
- the member list can be public
- also users can show his/her buddie lists, and permit close people find each other

Encouraging Free Culture

- by default we recommend the use of copyleft licenses for groups and users contents
- any content shows its license

Internationalization

- kune can easily translated to any language
- not occidental centric (no se como coño se dice esto)

Work in progress

- kune is in alpha state of development
- hablar de la parte pública
